Westley is working toward his Construction Management degree at Washington State University. He is a member of the Associated Students in Construction Management, vice president of MCAA, and hopes to join the Virtual Design in Construction competition team.

This past summer, Westley interned with Mortenson Construction on the Central Utility Plant for the University of Washington. It was his first internship, and she it was a great opportunity to get exposure to various areas he may witness upon graduation. Prior to attending WSU, he was a lot attendant at a Toyota dealership and a laborer for DJ Hartman Homes.

He has been involved in construction since his sophomore year of high school. He enrolled in the construction class, and was the president of Skills U.S.A Carpentry Club. As a class, they built three residential garages, and had the opportunity to get the club involved in the community through constructing housing units for bats, batting helmets, two batting cages, and other gear for the local little league.

Westley's long-term goal is be a construction executive for a respected company. He wants to incorporate the most advanced construction practices on every project to reduce waste, increase productivity, and enhance the growing community. Outside of school, he enjoys going to the gym, shooting, backpacking, fishing, and hunting.
