Tyler Kretschman

Senior, Central Washington University

My name is Tyler Kretschman, and I am currently working toward my Construction Management degree at Central Washington University. I am a member of the AGC student chapter and was a student athlete up until last year.

My interest in the construction industry began at an early age while working for my family's excavation company. Working in a team is something I have always thrived in, and being in a career where I can do that every day fascinates me. I started at Central Washington University in the winter of 2014 after transferring from a community college in California. I have interned for a construction company every summer since transferring to CWU.

I am currently interning at PCL Construction in Seattle on the 620 Terry Senior Living Tower. I will Intern with PCL until September and am hoping to be offered a full-time position upon graduating next spring. My long-term goals depend heavily on the economic market; however, I hope to find myself in a superintendent role in the next 10 years or start my own construction company. In my spare time, I enjoy hunting and fly fishing the Alpine Lake Wilderness that surrounds my hometown of Cle Elum, Washington.
