Sergio Ortega is originally from Mexico and is working toward his degree in Construction Management at the University of Washington. Recently, Sergio was a part of the International/National Electrical Contractors Association (NECA) team and the UW Design-Build competition team. He was elected as the UW Association of Students in Construction (ASIC) AGC coordinator.

His first exposure to construction was as a teenager working with his stepfather who was a skilled carpenter. Sergio has worked for many years as a carpenter and is currently interning as a project engineer at W.G. Clark Construction. After graduation, he plans to work for an established construction company, participate in continuing education and eventually lead projects within his company.

The AGC Education Foundation is proud to support Sergio. We look forward to seeing his contributions to the industry.
