Hunter Hohmann

Junior, Central Washington University

My name is Hunter Hohmann and I am currently working toward my Bachelor of Science in Construction Management degree at Central Washington University. I am an active member in the AGC student club, and plan to run for a club position in the coming year.

I have had a great interest in the construction field since I was very young. I grew up working alongside my dad in his masonry business and spent many weekends and school breaks on different jobsites. When I was nine years old, I built a small shed in my backyard and made it my woodworking shop, which became a hobby of mine. I later got a job at a small water district in my hometown and became fascinated with heavy machinery. These experiences throughout my childhood motivated me to pursue a career that focused on equipment and major excavations, specifically on the civil side of the industry.

I am currently working at KLB Construction out of Mukilteo, Washington as a project engineer intern, where I spend most of my time assisting the project engineer with day-to-day tasks. This has given me an opportunity to learn from foremen, superintendents, and laborers. Being out in the field has helped me develop many relationships and has expanded my understanding of field work. In the future, I hope to continue working with KLB and to eventually work my way up to a project manager.

Aside from school and construction, I am a very avid outdoorsman. I enjoy spending time fly fishing, hunting, and camping. During the summer, my days off are spent on the water pursuing tasty Dungeness crab, and if I have free weekends in the fall I love to go deer and elk hunting with a few close friends and my family.
