Max King

Senior, Washington State University

My name is Max King and I am working towards a Bachelor's Degree in Construction Management as well as a Minor in Engineering at Washington State University. I have been an active participant in my University's Association Students in Construction Management (ASCM) chapter as well as an Estimator on the Virtual Design and Construction (VDC) team for the ASC Reno Student Competition.

I have been interested in construction since I was a junior in high school. I started in a Construction Technology program at Clark Community College, where I learned construction math, trade techniques, and safety awareness. I was able to help construct a residential building. I wanted to further my education of the trades and get more involved in the overall process of the built environment. This led me to pursue a degree in Construction Management. I have learned so much over the last 3 years, attending WSU and interning with McKinstry and Fortis Construction.

I picked up quite a bit of knowledge at my previous internship with McKinstry. I learned how mechanical systems work and make a building come alive. This past summer, I worked on the general contractor side of a project with Fortis, and it was a completely different experience. I had the opportunity to work on a 6-story renovation job right in the heart of Portland. It was fascinating and a great learning experience.

After graduation, my hope is to be hired by a company that has a culture that aligns with my own ideals.
