Robert McKay Permann

Junior, Central Washington University

My name is McKay Permann, and I am pursuing a degree in Construction Management at Central Washington University. As a member of the AGC Club and the Construction Management honor society, I take my degree and course work very seriously.

I have worked in construction for the past 6 years in a variety of different capacities. During this time, I also took courses in hopes of finding the field I wanted to pursue in college. When I started working for an excavation company performing office and field work, I learned that Construction Management combines everything I want to learn and have in a future career. From that point on I decided to pursue a degree in Construction Management and was ecstatic when I was accepted into the CM program at Central Washington University.

While studying at CWU, I have worked for TTC Construction as a laborer and an operator. This position has taught me a great deal about what happens in the field. I think this job will really help me as I step into a management role one day. Next summer, I will work as an intern at the WSDOT office in Yakima, WA.

In my spare time I enjoy working on trucks, riding dirt bikes, jet skiing, traveling, and spending time with family and friends.
