Truman Hood
Senior, Washington State University

My name is Truman Hood, and I am a senior at Washington State University working towards my Bachelor's Degree in Architecture.

I always enjoyed design and construction growing up, from Legos, Lincoln Logs, and Tinker Toys to building dog houses, sheds, and a chicken coop. In high school I took a CAD-incorporated metal/wood shop course and fell in love with the creative aspect of construction. I enrolled at WSU in 2015 and I immediately began taking both Architecture and Construction Management courses. I joined the local WSU American Institute of Architecture Students (AIAS) where I partook in community projects and was paired with an industry professional mentor. My Junior year I became a mentor myself, which has been a very rewarding experience.

Over the last two summers, I interned at SABArchitects in Seattle. I have worked on a variety of projects, from a 21-story commercial building to a small-lab healthcare building. I intend to continue working on these large-scale commercial and residential projects after graduating and earning my Master's degree. My ambitions include accreditation within 5 years of graduation and one day leading my own architecture firm as a principle.

When I am not working hard as a student or intern, I enjoy fishing, hiking, skiing, and Seattle sports; all alongside friends and family.
