Senior, Central Washington University

My name is Bibi Vasquez and I am working toward a post-baccalaureate construction management degree at Central Washington University. I am a member of the AGC student chapter and the Sigma Lambda Chi international construction honor society PSI III chapter.

My passion for construction began when I was working as a project administrator in residential construction. Having the experience of seeing a structure transformed, visualizing my part in the project, and being involved in the team that helped the project come to fruition was very fulfilling. After that experience, I knew I wanted to be part of an industry that is constantly improving people's lives and infrastructures.

I have been interning with Hensel Phelps as a field engineer at the Sound Transit Operation Maintenance Facility East project in Bellevue, WA since June 2019. My long-term aspiration is to be a project manager or construction manager for unique commercial complex projects specializing in environmentally sustainable design.

During winter I try to snowboard as much as possible at Crystal or Baker. I have a really great group of friends that get together to backpack in the Enchantments once a year. Otherwise, I spend my time playing soccer, going to movies, hiking, and trying to pet every dog I see.
