Branden Currie

Junior, Washington State University

My name is Branden Currie and I am junior at Washington State University. I am currently working toward my construction management degree. I am a member of the AGC student chapter and vice president of the WSU wrestling team. Additionally, I am the junior representative for the construction management program.

When I began at WSU, I thought I wanted to study engineering. However, similar to many students before me, I soon realized that engineering did not peak my real interests. Almost immediately I realized that I had a passion and skill for construction. I am continually fascinated by the possibilities and processes of taking designs and creating structures.

This year I have earned an amazing internship opportunity with Swinerton Builders. Currently I am assisting on multiple projects across Washington which range from tenant improvements to multi-million dollar ground up projects. I hope to continue working with Swinerton next year as well. My long-term goal would be to work for Swinerton as a project manager in their Renewable Energy Division. When I am not dedicating myself to work or studies, I enjoy spending time with my friends and family or any activity that allows me to explore nature around me.
