Coleman Coddington

Graduate Student, Washington State University

My name is Coleman Coddington and I am working to complete my master's degree in architecture at Washington State University. I have been accepted to the 1-year accelerated M.Arch program. This fall will be my third semester of graduate classes. I am a member of the WSU American Institute of Architecture Students (AIAS) chapter as well as the head editor of the Master of Design club website.

I have been interested in the design and construction field for as long as I can remember. Both my father and uncle have architecture degrees from WSU. For the past seven years I have worked with my father at his small design-build firm in Kitsap county where I have gained experience in work ranging from foundation preparation and framing to finish work and design help.

In the future I hope to work at a design-build firm with a focus on construction in the Seattle area. I also would like to continue to work with my father to craft my residential construction skills. Further down the road I hope to own my own design-build firm in the Kitsap/King county area focusing on residential design and construction.

In my spare time, I enjoy many activities revolving around the outdoors - fishing, backpacking, golfing, and much more.
